The tank troops stationed until recently in Ludwigslust have moved to the woods in the neighborhood of Jessenitz (T-22) on the boundary of the Russian and British Zones, where they have dug in their tanks.

The Russians are reported to be blowing up the Naval Arsenal at Jeggensitz.

A large underground ammunition dump at Altenhain (M-57) SE of Brandis was guarded by German police until January 1948, when they were relieved by Russian troops. At that time large quantities of ammunition were removed. Trainloads of guns and tanks are frequently driven into this dump and do not reappear.

4. There was an underground ammunition factory there at the end of the war; the machine tools are now being rehabilitated. Ammunition, especially 320 mm shells, is at present being cleaned. Several dumps containing 150 mm gas shells have remained sealed since the end of the war.
